Some courts need you to get a computer printout that shows what child or spousal support should be.

You can get this from a private attorney or your court's family law facilitator. Or search the Internet for a program that calculates child support using California's guidelines.

If there is more than one minor child from your marriage, you must show the amount of support for each child.

Also list any standard child support "add-ons," like:

- Child-care costs so one of the parents can work
- Costs for the children's education
- Costs for a parent's training or education to acquire job skills
- Uninsured health-care costs for the children
- Costs for your children's special needs
- Travel costs for visitation

Make sure the costs you list are reasonable and necessary.

You must also say who will provide health insurance for the children and how uninsured health-care costs will be shared.
